Even with THAAD defence, North Korea missile barrage poses threat to South

North Korea's latest weapons test showed it can accurately fire multiple medium-range ballistic missiles, an attack strategy that experts said could test the advanced US THAAD anti-missile system which began to arrive in South Korea . Advances in North Korea's banned missile programme have also caused concern in Tokyo, where sources with knowledge of the government's thinking said a "swarm-like" attack using multiple missiles could overwhelm Japan's already stretched defences. Images released by North Korean state media showed leader Kim Jong Un presiding over the simultaneous launch of four ballistic missiles, which landed in seas off Japan's northwest.

US moves to ease H-1B spouses from jobs

The Trump administration is moving quickly to drain the American economy and its workforce of immigrant labour and foreign workers, not just those who are illegal but also those who have won permission to work legally. It has now come to light that the new administration's department of justice (DOJ) has filed a brief in the Washington DC court of appeals seeking a 60-day freeze in a case involving employment authorisation for H-4 visa-holders, who are primarily dependent spouses of H-1B visa-holders.
